Founder
Cubit Capital

Trevor Rees-Jones is the founder of Cubit Capital, a venture capital firm that invests in courageous leaders building businesses that confront meaningful problems.

Cubit's investment strategy is intentionally broad, backing companies in two critical domains: transformative technologies that drive societal resilience and progress — including energy innovation, industrial resilience, and national security — and ventures committed to human flourishing, which support everything from expanding access to dignified employment and uplifting marginalized communities to sharing stories of hope through redemptive media.

Trevor received his MBA from the SMU Cox School of Business and received his undergraduate degree from Texas Christian University.

Trevor lives in Dallas, TX with his wife Jenny and their three children.
